U. S. Reform Jews Study 30 Congregations Over Ethics Issue In Business

Leaders of the Reform movement in American Judaism are engaged in a searching study of some thirty congregations across the United States to find out whether a religious Jew can satisfy the ethical demands of his religion and yet be successful as a business man.

According to Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman, co-director of the Commission on Social Action of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, business and professional men who have taken part in seminars in connection with the study, have already indicated they are "deeply troubled" by discrepancies between the "routine" moral decisions which must be made daily in business and the Judaic concept of combining justice and love in moral acts.

The study grew out of a proposal to the U.A.H.C. in 1957 by Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn, of Temple Israel, Boston, calling for a study of the relation between business ethics and religion, says the New York Herald Tribune. Seminars on "Judaism and My Work" have been held by groups of twenty to twenty-five business and professional men from selected congregations.

The seminars seek answers to such questions as: "What are the principal ethical problems and dilemmas in our business or profession?" "What are the most common violations and corruptions of ethical values in our lines of work?" "Is it at all possible to achieve at least a moderate measure of success without sacrificing our ideals?" "How, if at all, can unethical competitive tactics be met without being matched?"

New York area congregations involved in the survey are the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, 30 W. 68th Street, New York; Union Temple, 17 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, and Nassau Community Temple, West Hempstead, L. I.

"We're not concerned at the moment with the thieves — the man who pads an expense account, the quiz participant who has the answers supplied beforehand," Rabbi Lipman declared in an interview. "That's straight fraud. They have alternatives. Their way of making a living is not basically in conflict.

"But we are concerned with the men who want to do right, who come into conflict with economic reality. They include the druggist, who wonders whether to sell patent medicines, knowing they are on the Post Office fraud list and available from a competitor across the street."

The quiz show investigation, Rabbi Lipman observed, is "symptomatic" of the fact that many American business men are "willing to accept as respectable a very low level of activity" in economic practices, summarized in the legal principle of "caveat emptor" (let the buyer beware).

Both Rabbi Lipman and his co-director, Albert Vorspan, of

Israel Disclaims Part In Arab Refugee Plan

Israel disclaimed any part in the "compromise" agreement reached by the United States and the Arab states on the Palestine refugee question. Israel was not consulted in advance and Israel is not a party to the agreement, Arthur Lourie, the Israeli representative to the United Nations, told the General Assembly's Special Political Committee.

Although the agreement was formally presented, as a resolution sponsored by Indonesia and Pakistan, its general terms had been known to the Israelis and others, says the New York Times. The text is largely non-controversial in that it extends United Nations aid for three more years to a million Palestinian Arab refugees who have been living in Arab countries bordering Israel since the Palestine conflict in 1948.

Israel fears that the text stresses settling the eleven-year-old problem by renewed efforts to return the refugees to their former homes, which now are within Israel's borders. The resolution presented to the committee was worked out at a series of private meetings between representatives of the Arab states and the United States, which is the major contributor to the aid program administered by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency.

Israeli delegates were kept informed of the negotiations, they said, but only after the United States had committed itself to a formula that further repatriation efforts be made by the long-dormant Palestine Conciliation Commission.

The Arab states have been insistent that the refugees must go back to Israel, while Israel has maintained that the country cannot absorb them and they should be integrated into the Arab world.

Virgil M. Hancher, United States alternate representative, urged approval of the text with an appeal that the United Nations do something promptly and positively about the lingering problem of the refugees and not "fall into an attitude of listless resignation."

The United States delegate approved the text's call for a review of the food ration lists, which are known to contain at least 150,000 ineligibles. They include the names of some refugees who have died. So far Jordan particularly has rejected the agency's efforts to revise the lists.

As for the Conciliation Commission, Mr. Hancher urged all states concerned — that is, Israel and the Arabs — approach the problem realistically and in a spirit of accommodation, says the New York Times. The commission, consisting of France, Turkey, and the United States, was set up in 1948. It sought to get a basic settlement of Arab-Israeli

J.D.C. Budget For Help Abroad Is Over $29 Million

The Joint Distribution Committee adopted a budget of $29,142,000 to carry out its programs of aid next year among 260,000 Jewish men, women and children in twenty-five countries and Israel. The action was taken by 600 delegates, representing various sections of the U.S. at the annual meeting of the agency in the Statler Hilton Hotel, in New York. There were strong appeals for support of the United Jewish Appeal, of which the Joint Distribution Committee is a beneficiary.

In listing the Committee's financial needs, Edward M. M. Warburg, its general chairman, said the United Jewish Appeal had "helped make possible the physical survival of the great flood of Jewish refugees escaping from dictatorship, anti-Semitism, and hunger in the post-war years."

Mr. Warburg, a founder and honorary chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, was re-elected chairman for the fifteenth successive year, says the New York Times. Pointing to the aid given to Jews in reaching free lands and Israel, Mr. Warburg expressed his gratitude to the "U.J.A. and the American Jewish community which established it, because before ... J. A., when thousands raised their voices in agony, in our helplessness, we could only echo this echo; today we are not helpless."

The adoption of the budget followed a report by Charles H. Jordan, director general for the agency's overseas operations. Mr. Jordan said that "deteriorating political and economic conditions in North Africa, particularly Morocco and Tunisia, had increased need among the Jewish population — and reduced the contributions of local governments and communities — resulting in heavier demands for J.D.C. help."

He said that Jews living in Moslem lands "had the double misfortune of being an underprivileged minority living in under-developed countries." He reported that about 100,000 of the 500,000 Jews in these countries are regularly receiving some assistance.

Mr. Jordan called attention to the agency's programs among the aged in Israel. He said that the Committee had expanded its network of old-age residences in Israel "to care for all the eligible aged among newcomers." Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice chairman of the agency, reported that last year more than 207,000 people had received assistance. In a breakdown of figures, he added that 100,000 were assisted in Moslem countries; 55,000 in Europe; 42,000 in Israel; and about 4,500 in Australia and South America.

He reported that under a Soviet-Polish repatriation agreement, 4,000 Jews from the Soviet Union entered Poland in the first nine

Israeli Cabinet Pla Promises Basic Improvements

The Left-wing parties, Achdut Avoda and Mapam, decided to enter Israel's new government only a few hours before Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion entered the Knesset chamber to present his five-party coalition Cabinet and its set of basic principles to the Knesset (Parliament) for a vote of confidence. Mr. Ben-Gurion thus won his fight for a coalition embracing both Left and center forces, a fight he waged out of a belief that a broad Cabinet would give him ample room for political maneuvering and not leave him dependent on any single party for a majority, says the New York Herald Tribune. The coalition, commanding eighty-six of 120 Knesset seats, included Mr. Ben-Gurion's own Mapai (Labor) party and the Progressive (Liberal) party.

Earlier, the Leftists had balked at Mr. Ben-Gurion's demand for an ironclad agreement on collective responsibility of coalition members. This peculiarly Israeli problem arose from the fact that until now Mr. Ben-Gurion has had no legal means of dismissing a Cabinet minister who voted against a government decision.

A Cabinet agreement was finally worked out, however, providing that any minister voting against a government decision or abstaining without prior Cabinet consent would thereby automatically resign. The Cabinet platform said an amendment to that effect would be added to the country's basic law.

The platform reflected last summer's rioting among North African immigrants in slum areas which put the spotlight on problems of under-educated and ill-housed newcomers from Afro-Asian countries. It called for elimination of immigrant tin-hut communities with the utmost speed and gradual eradication of city slums.

Although free compulsory education stops at the age of fourteen, the platform pledged free tuition for fourteen to eighteen-year-olds whose families cannot afford to pay, says the New York Herald Tribune. Against the background of Cairo's recent attacks on Israel's project to pipe Jordan River water over 100 miles southward to irrigate the arid Negev, the platform promised speedy implementation of this project.

The new Cabinet, formed six weeks and one day after the Parliamentary election in which the Mapai scored major gains, leaves key posts in the hands of Mr. Ben-Gurion's party and includes such Mapai veterans as Mrs. Golda Meir as Foreign Minister; Levi Eshkol as Finance Minister; and Pinhas Sapir as Minister of Commerce and Industry. Mr. Ben-Gurion himself will continue both as Prime Minister and Defense Minister. The government's platform said Israel would offer the Arabs an agreement leading to full disarmament and the abolition of the armed forces of Israel and the Arab states.

"Constant and unhampered mutual control" of implementation of an agreement would have to be assured, the Israeli proposal said. The offer would be based, it was stated, on the condition that the borders and sovereignty of the states concerned would not be affected by the agreement.

The basic principles called for replacement of the ten-year-old armistice agreements by non-aggression pacts "with effective United Nations guaranties." Cessation of "all political, economic and military acts of hostility" was also proposed.

Cabinet political sources contended that the twin Israeli proposals might make the Arabs put up or shut up, says the New York Herald Tribune. They claimed that the Arab states refuse to make peace with Israel while one of the Arab propaganda weapons is the repeated charge that Israel plans aggression.

Research In Jewish Folklore At The Hebrew University

"The Emperor Napoleon, during his retreat from Moscow in 1812, lost his way on the snow-covered steppes and would have died if he had not met an old Jew who showed him the way back to his army. Not having any money on him with which to reward the Jew, Napoleon gave him his coat, which the man took back to his village. But the Jew, fearing that this highly-prized gift would get him and his fellow-Jews into trouble when the Russians occupied his village, embroidered a design in Hebrew letters on the Emperor's coat and turned it into a parochet, a screen for the Ark of the Law, and there it hangs in the synagogue to this day."

This is one of the many Jewish folk-stories recorded by Dr. Dov Noy, who, besides teaching Hebrew Literature at the Hebrew University, is also carrying out research in Jewish folklore on a Warburg Fellowship granted him by the University. In addition, he is director of the Ethnological Museum and Folklore Archives run by the Municipality in Haifa, and it is here that the above story found its appropriate end. For five generations the parochet remained in the hands of the Luria family, who took it with them on their odyssey through many lands. Then one day they presented it to the Museum, where, on examination, it was indeed found to be a French Army coat of the Napoleonic era, with the Emperor's initials on it still clearly visible.

Jewish folk tales have been a source of endless fascination to Dr. Noy ever since his childhood in Poland, and in his student days at the Hebrew University he found himself adding to his already rich and varied collection of them. His studies of Jewish history for the Master's degree

● CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS ●

Max E. Levy, former executive director of the Edmonton Jewish Community Council, has been appointed field service director for the newly created Canadian Committee of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, of which D. Lou Harris, of Toronto, is chairman. Mr. Levy will serve Canadian communities from coast to coast, working from the Montreal offices of the Congress, which is participating in the new, direct plan. Prior to Mr. Levy's appointment communities here were served by regional directors based in cities in the United States. The decision to create a service for the special needs of the Canadian Jewish communities, was reached after study and discussions by the Council's Canadian Committee and the Congress. The Committee, originally led by Arthur E. Gelber, of Toronto, worked with the Congress to establish it and share responsibility for it. Edward Barkoff, of Montreal; Abe Steinberg, of Winnipeg; and Sam. C. Smurlick, of Hamilton, are vice-chairmen of the Committee; Hyman Altman, of Vancouver, is secretary; Nathan Gaisin, of Montreal, treasurer. Mr. Levy will provide services in community organization, fund-raising, budgeting, health and welfare planning, community studies and surveys, personnel and publicity and campaign aids, through distribution of reports from the national office of the Council, correspondence, meetings, and direct consultations on frequent field trips. The Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds is the national association of 216 united fund-raising and social service agencies. These central Jewish organizations, which represent more than 800 communities throughout the United States and Canada, annually raise the bulk of all philanthropic funds for local, national, and overseas Jewish needs. The Council provides central services for its member agencies in community organization, campaigning, budgeting, health welfare planning, personnel, campaign, and community interpretation. Its policies and programs are formulated at an annual general assembly of community representatives. The Congress represents every Jewish community in Canada, all the recognized Jewish groups, organizations, synagogues, schools, and societies and is active in every field of Jewish interest such as education, religious welfare, public relations, and participates in world Jewish affairs. Before taking his position as director of the Edmonton Jewish Community Council, Mr. Levy served as administrative assistant in the Federation of Jewish Community Services of Montreal; was program director at Neighborhood House and case-worker at the Baron de Hirsch Family and Child Welfare Bureau, also in Montreal. He received his Master's degree in 1956 from the McGill University School of Social Work.

● A tribute to the scientists of the Hebrew University, and in particular to Dr. Jack Gross of Montreal who now heads the University's Department of Cancer Research and Experimental Medicine, was paid by Dr. Cornelius P. Rhoads who was director of the Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research in the U.S. until his recent death, following a visit he paid to Israel this year. The aim of the visit was to survey the work being done by Israel scientists searching for "potential agents for the killing of cancer", and to ascertain whether it would be possible to use Israel as a central scientific and medical point for furthering medical research among the Near East nations. Dr. Rhoads said: "I can speak particularly of a group, whose work falls between the pre-clinical and clinical faculty, working under Dr. Jack Gross. Dr. Gross, who had been working in Brooklyn at the Downstate Medical School, was originally sent to Israel under the auspices of the World Health Organization as Visiting Professor at the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School for a year. His appointment has now been renewed for an additional two years. The unit in experimental medicine he directed at the Brooklyn Hospital, is the best I know in experimental medicine anywhere in the United States. To have attracted a man of his competence, whose roots are in another country, is indeed a most eloquent tribute to the Hebrew University and Israel."

A Bedouin Police Tracker Finds The Child

"Mazal! Mazal! Where's my little Mazal!" The anxious voice of a young Yemenite mother echoed through the village of Moshav Kadimah. But four-year old Mazal was nowhere to be found. She had left the house three hours ago while the mother was busy at her work and since then nobody had seen her.

"Mazal! Mazal!" The mother's voice became more and more despairing and the neighbours joined in the search. Someone called the police who immediately began firing questions. "Where did you see her last?" "There," said the confused mother. "No . . . over there . . . I don't remember."

A short policeman appeared from nowhere. He squatted on the ground, scrutinized it, smelt it and scratched it with a stick. Turning to the weeping mother, he said, "I swear by Allah and by the life of my father the Sheikh that I will find your little girl. I won't give up till I find her."

The mother was not consoled and was about to ask a question but Mohammed Abu-Jarrad, aged 39, the best tracker in the Israel Police Force, had already begun his search. His sharp eyes had detected the footsteps of a small child which went in the direction of the neighbouring Arab village. He followed the narrow track while the Police and the weeping mother followed close behind.

After a short while, Mohammed straightened up with a look of disappointment on his face. He had lost the track. A further examination revealed a few small stones which had recently been moved. "That's it!" He had picked up the traces again. Sometimes they were clearly visible and at other times, disappeared. From time to time Mohammed knelt down on the damp ground and examined a stalk of grass which had recently been bent and which aroused his suspicion. His companion's questions went unanswered as Mohammed was completely engrossed in the search.

Night fell and the policemen fired shots into the air to scare off hyenas and jackals. From time to time they shouted the child's name through megaphones. The other groups of policemen gave up searching independently and all silently followed Mohammed. Suddenly his eyes lit up with hope. He had found fresh tracks. "Halt!" cried Mohammed suddenly. He had seen some object in a peculiar position. Yes! There she was! Mohammed had not been mistaken. The little girl had fallen on the ground, nine kilometres away from home. The nine hours search was not in vain.

This was the first child that Mohammed Abu Jarrad had rescued in 1951, when he joined the Israel Police Force. Since then only once was he too late. Hundreds of policemen with five bloodhounds set out to search for little Yosef who had strayed in the Galilee. When the policemen gave up hope of finding the child, Mohammed was called in. Once again he swore by Allah that he would find the child and return him to his parents. He found Yosef after a five-day search, but the child was dead.

Mohammed says that one cannot learn how to become a tracker. The Bedouin do not learn it, they have it in their blood. He inherited the instinct from his father, the Sheik of a tribe, who was known as one of the best in the region. Sheik Abu Jarrad only needed to look at the tracks left by a thief to know to which tribe or family he belonged. Furthermore, the footsteps of any man were engraved on his memory for many years.

One day there came to Sheik Abu Jarrad's tent a representative of the people who had settled at Kfar Saba and asked him to provide them with a watchman for their new settlement. Because all the men of the tribe were busy, the Sheik sent his own son Mohammed to do the job. It was then that Mohammed began to develop his close ties with the Jewish community. He stood guard at Kfar Saba and Even Yehuda and then later became watchman at Kibbutz Ma'barot.

During the War of Independence, Mohammed's father and the rest of his tribe went over to Jordan, but Mohammed remained in Israel and decided to adapt himself to the new way of life. His Bedouin wife Haravia helped him in this task. She visited the homes of Jewish women, learnt how to cook on gas and electricity, and became interested in modern child-care. She decided that they too would live like the Jews.

In 1949 when Mohammed joined the police force, Haravia, who changed her name to Rachel realized that her husband's wages would not be enough to live the type of life she dreamt about. She kept cows, and sold their milk, saving from this and economizing generally until they had sufficient capital to build their own house. Today Abu Jarrad's house is one of the nicest in the region.

Mohammed's love of children stems from the fact that he has ten of his own, all of whom have Hebrew names. The eldest, Eitan, has graduated from the Natanya High School. Mohammed has come to know Jewish children so well because his own children have been brought up with them, speak Hebrew as well as they do, and in fact hardly differ from them.

the Commission on Social Action, says the New York Herald Tribune, regard the frequency of questionable business ethics as a reflection upon religion in the U.S.

"The fact that American religious institutions are getting into this field only now is a serious indictment of religion," Rabbi Lipman observed. Participants in the seminars, he said, frequently remark that "this is what the synagogue should do."

"For too many years, the emphasis of religious institutions has been unreal and at least partially irrelevant," he continued. "The kind of statement that says 'think positively and pray a lot' doesn't meet the real problems of the man who sits behind the desk in an economic society which makes it tough to be ethical."

Mr. Vorspan, commenting on the Congressional television investigation, declared that "what television — and the nation — need are higher goals and higher moral standards." He added, says the New York Herald Tribune, that "religious groups are challenged to help provide the inspiration and moral fiber" to stimulate audiences into action against unethical practices.

Awaiting Trial For Murder At Last

BY DR. NEHEMIAH ROBINSON, OF NEW YORK, DIRECTOR OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS INSTITUTE OF JEWISH AFFAIRS

The recent efforts by German prosecuting attorneys to bring to justice Nazis responsible for the murder of Jews and other victims of Hitlerism have confirmed information reaching the World Jewish Congress that a number of them succeeded in avoiding prosecution by assuming aliases. Not infrequently they even found employment in governmental offices under false names, whose assumption was at least in some instances, made with the knowledge and connivance of sympathizers.

A case in point, which demonstrates both the caliber of the criminals and the techniques used, came to light in connection with the arrest of a former professor of psychiatry at the University of Wuerzburg and SS member, Dr. Werner Heyde. Prof. Heyde was one of those mainly responsible for the implementation of the Nazi program of euthanasia (so-called mercy killing) which began late in 1939 and was stopped in the second part of 1941 because, despite all efforts at concealment, it became too widely known that its real purpose was to eliminate "superfluous eaters" instead of inducing easy death for those stricken with hopeless physical and mental illnesses.

According to conservative estimates, about 70,000 patients were killed by August, 1941; and a further 30,000 were on the lists. The general stoppage did not prevent the carrying out of what became known as "Aktion 14 F 13" involving inmates of concentration camps, including Jewish victims.

Who were chiefly responsible for this program and what happened to them? They were Reichsleiter Philip Bouhler (chief of Hitler's private chancellery); Dr. Karl Brandt (Hitler's key physician); Dr. Leonardo Conti (Reich chief of physicians); Dr. Linden (high official in the Reich Ministry of the Interior); Viktor Brack (SS-Oberfuehrer); Prof. Paul Nitzsche (director of a clinic in Saxony); and Prof. Werner Heyde.

Bouhler, Conti, and Linden committed suicide after the German collapse; Brandt and Brack were sentenced to death in Nuremberg and hanged; and Nitzsche was sentenced to death in Dresden. Only Heyde succeeded in avoiding justice. He was arrested soon after the war but escaped from a U.S. Military Police jeep while being transported from Frankfurt to Wuerzburg. Despite all efforts to apprehend him, no trace was found; it was assumed that he had escaped to Egypt.

Soon after the war Heyde appeared in Schleswig-Holstein under the name of Dr. Sawade and treated former concentration camp inmates. He was arrested by the British and transferred to the prosecuting authority in Nuremberg. It was then that he managed to escape. Using the same alias, Sawade, he turned up in Flensburg as an expellee. He worked for a time as an agricultural laborer but in 1949 he was hired as a sports physician. Allegedly with the assistance of his best friend, Voss, the Attorney General of Schleswig-Holstein, Sawade obtained a position in the State Social Insurance Department. This was done although Sawade could produce no medical approbation certificate.

For years he lived in Flensburg as a widower and greatly respected physician. He became so convinced of his security that he even lectured on euthanasia and reported that in Dachau there was a certain Professor Heyde who had designated inmates as incapable of work to be handed over to the SS-guards for extermination. Among the physicians to whom Sawade spoke was one of his former pupils who must have known his real identity.

Despite the assumed disguise, rumors circulated in Flensburg for at least a year that Sawade was someone else. His wife, who lives in Wuerzburg, applied for an annuity. How this application resulted in the suspicion that Dr. Sawade actually was Prof. Heyde, has not yet been revealed. At any rate, on November 5 a physician from Kiel reported Sawade to the authorities. When the police arrived to arrest him, he was gone, but they found the medical approbation of Prof. Heyde and letters from his two sons. On November 12, Heyde finally appeared "of his own free will" in Frankfurt before Chief Prosecutor Wolff, who is in charge of the Auschwitz investigation, and was arrested. He is now awaiting trial.

only served to heighten his interest in the subject, and by the time he left for the University of Indiana for purposes of post-graduate work, the interest had inevitably extended also to folklore in general, to anthropology and comparative literature. It was actually for his work in these three fields that he received his doctorate at this American University.

Dr. Noy believes that Israel today is a unique treasure-house of Jewish folklore which, however, is in danger of being lost as old traditions die and new ones are formed. In an age of radio and cinema, ancient folk-stories are likely to be forgotten very quickly, indeed, unless an attempt is made to collect them systematically, which is the task Dr. Noy has set himself.

The tales Dr. Noy loves best are those of the Oriental Jews. He will pick up stories in the most unlikely places, on an Egged bus to Eilat, sitting next to a newcomer from Yemen; at a Kurdish wedding in a maabarah; at a social gathering of Bokharian Jews in Jerusalem; sipping Turkish coffee with a venerable patriarch from Morocco. He finds that these tales, in an even greater degree than those of the Ashkenazi Jews, have a number of distinguishing features not commonly found in the folklore of other nations. For instance, they have a deep religious content, and the spiritual element is usually dominant. Thus miraculous events are generally ascribed to divine or diabolical intervention rather than to ordinary black or white magic.

On the other hand, the transformations from man into beast or vice versa, to be found in so many folk stories, are usually absent from Jewish ones because the concept somehow conflicts with the Jewish tradition of the inviolability of the human soul. Not that animal tales are missing from Jewish folklore. They would seem to derive, however, from the Jataka sagas of Indian folklore rather then from the fables of Aesop, which form the basis of most western animal fairy tales.

Spirits, as distinct from ghosts, abound in Jewish tales, particularly in those of the Oriental Jews, which is one reason why the carrying of amulets is still so common among these communities. Nevertheless Jewish folk stories do have many elements in common with the folk literature of other nations. A good example is the German fairy tale "Die Sonne bringt es an den Tag" ("The Sun Brings All to Light") which was published by the Grimm Brothers.

Folklorists had known for some time that the tale originated in India, but they could not trace the route by which it had reached Europe. Research in Israel showed that a similar story exists among the Yemenite Jews, except that it is the rain and not the sun which gives away the criminal. In any event the location of the story in Yemen appears to provide a link between India and Europe in the migration of the tale.

Dr. Noy is concerned with preserving not only folk tales but also folk art and customs. In his Museum he has collected some of the finest specimens of oriental Jewish folk art, among them dresses, headgear, jewellery, and items of embroidery, which, while beautiful to the eye, are also interesting from the ethnological point of view. The most popular folk custom among the Oriental communities in Israel, apart from the customs associated with social functions like weddings, funerals, bar mitzvot and the like, consists of pilgrimages to venerated sites.

More recently there has been a move to develop pilgrimages to Mount Zion, but in genuine popularity these still do not measure up to the old-established ascents to the Cave of Elijah on Mount Carmel, the Tomb of the Rambam in Tiberias, or the Tomb of Shimon bar Yohai at Meron. Specially noteworthy is the fact that many of the customs of the Yemenite Jews are linked to the annual pilgrimage they used to make to the Tomb of Shalom Shabazi at Taiz, in Yemen. Yemenite story-tellers already speak of visions in which the remains of Shalom Shabazi will miraculously come to Israel, an interesting parallel to the Arab tale of the remains of Moses being transferred from his tomb on Mount Nebo in Transjordan to the Nebi Musa shrine near the Dead Sea.

Dr. Noy will not miss any of these pilgrimages by the Oriental Jews. They are invariably a source of new legends and fairy tales, some of them hitherto unknown to scholars, and at the same time they provide an exceptional opportunity of observing customs which may vanish only too quickly in a society undergoing so rapid a process of change as that of Israel.

Protests World Bank Loan To U.A.R. For Suez Canal

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein, of Rochester, N. Y., chairman of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, made the following statement in New York:

"The free world threw away another opportunity to end the illegal blockade of the Suez Canal today when the World Bank approved a large loan to the United Arab Republic to improve the Canal without securing a commitment from the UAR to keep the waterway open to the shipping of all nations. Our own government is the largest stockholder in the Bank and its acquiescence in the loan cannot be squared with the promise made by President Eisenhower in 1957 and with the UN Security Council resolution of Sept. 1, 1951, which branded the blockade as a violation of the UN armistice agreement."

(Rabbi Bernstein referred to the statement President Eisenhower made over television on Feb. 20, 1957, when he said: "We should not assume that, if Israel withdraws, Egypt will prevent Israeli shipping from using the Suez Canal of the Gulf of Aqaba. If, unhappily, Egypt does hereafter violate the Armistice Agreement or other international obligations, then this should be dealt with firmly by the society of nations.")

Rabbi Bernstein's statement continued: "At the time President Eisenhower made that 1957 statement, many critics of our foreign policy were charging that the Administration was guilty of a double moral standard, and that it was bringing pressures on Israel to withdraw her forces while ignoring the Arab aggressions against Israel. The Administration has insisted that it still favors the free and unrestricted use of the Suez Canal by the shipping of all nations but the granting of the loan today is renewed evidence of a one-sided policy which closes its eyes to the Arab boycott, blockade and aggression against Israel and therefore defeats progress toward peace."

Philip M. Klutznick, national president of the American Friends of the Hebrew University and chairman of the International Council of B'nai B'rith, will be the guest speaker at a dinner of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University on January 6, at the Windsor Hotel, in Montreal. Allen Bronfman is president; Samuel B. Rist, national director; both of Montreal. Mr. Klutznick is a personal consultant to President Dwight Eisenhower, and was a member of the United States Delegation to the 12th session of the United Nation's General Assembly. In 1946 he was awarded the Certificate of Merit by President Harry S. Truman for directing a "crash" government building programme that produced 600,000 housing units. A lawyer, and a member of the Hebrew University board of governors, Mr. Klutznick is chairman of the board of the American Community Builders Inc., which developed the totally pre-planned suburban community of Park Forest, Illinois. He recently launched as a major building project in Israel the construction of a seaport city near the Biblical site of Ashdod. When fully developed, it is expected that Ashdod will have a population of 150,000. It is to be the largest pre-planned community ever attempted with private capital. Mr. Klutznick travels more than 100,000 miles a year in behalf of Jewish causes. He is a vice-president of the National Jewish Welfare Board and of the World Federation of YMHA's and Jewish Community Centers; a director of the Jewish National Fund; a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America; of the executive committee of the American Council To Improve Our Neighborhoods; and served on the 17-member housing commission surveying minority group housing under a grant from the Fund For The Republic. ISRAEL DISCLAIMS PART disputes but was unsuccessful and in recent years has been virtually inactive.

Mr. Hancher also made an appeal for a discussion in the Special Political Committee that would not upset what he called the delicately balanced "compromise." It was this description of the resolution that prompted Mr. Lourie's two-sentence disclaimer that Israel shared any responsibility for the results of the private negotiations.
